2010 Visual Art Collection – ‘Crowds and Characters’

There is a shift in style for this collection, that focuses on crowds, people, and what they do to protest something, or to protest nothing at all, where people gather, and what people do to entertain themselves. But it is also a return to early work, in 2001 where black outlines of characters were part of the style. The artwork of Initially NO, is always about looking outward, and influenced by gatherings of people, and why they agree or disagree with each other, but this collection makes that more pictorially obvious.

Large canvases, and a sense of cartoon, that was also in her smaller black and white ink on paper images she made at the same time (to be published in her BEINGS coffee-table book series).
